Home Use of Electricity Rises Locally

(Special to the Avalanche)

NEW YORK — If the amount of electricity used by a family is an indicator of its standard of living, then standards are on the rise in Grayling.

The two go hand-in-hand, say the economists. When one goes up, so does the other. Locally, according to the latest figures, electric consumption per household is at an all-time high.

Details on the amount of current used and on the cost of service are provided in reports just released by the Edison Electric Institute and by the Federal Power Commission.

As to costs, a basis of comparison is offered in the EPC report, which presents typical electric bills in effect in 5,704 communities throughout the country as of January 1, 1964.

In Grayling, it shows, the charge for 100 kilowatt hours of electricity, an amount sufficient for small lighting and appliance needs, came to $3.69 a month.

ELSEWHERE in the United States, the average for this amount was $4.03. In the East North Central States it was $3.93.

For 250 kilowatt hours a month, the local bill was $6.92. This compares with a national average of $7.43 and with $7.40 in the East North Central States.

For local households that used 500 kilowatt-hours a month, which covered lighting, refrigeration, appliances and cooking, the bills were $8.97.

In the rest of the country they averaged $10.61 and, in the East North Central States, $10.49.

There is a considerable range in the cost of electricity, from one section of the country to another. Various factors tend to produce these variations, points out the EPC. Among them are differences in production costs due to distance costs due to distance from the source of fuel, the compactness of the area served and the kind of ownership.

ALTHOUGH residential rates, nationally, have been dropping in the last year or two, they remain higher than they were ten years ago. Then, the cost for 100, 250 and 500 kilowatt was $3.86, $7.18 and $10.30. The figures show that the amount of residential electricity consumed in Grayling's regional area came to 4,121 kilowatt hours per household in the year as against 3,457 used in 1958.

Local Sailor Wins Radarman Rating

Maintaining the highest possible degree of mobilization readiness is the primary mission of the Naval Reserve. In order to accomplish this, each man, early in his career, spends two years with the Operating Forces. Prior to his tour of fleet duty, every eligible man receives technical training in the Navy's Service School Command, and is advanced to pay grade E-4 (NCO).

Among the most recent graduates of service schools lined up in front and center of their division during the drill Monday night, June 21st, and receiving a petty officer insignia and congratulations from Lieut. Commander John T. McGee, the division commanding officer, was John A. Engel, from Grayling, promoted to Radarman. Engel reported on June 22 to Philadelphia Navy Yard for two years active duty. Other naval reserve personnel from the county reporting or receiving duty are: SA Mike Hunn has returned from afloat-ashore school of two weeks at Great Lakes Naval Station; SR Pete Panch, Bill Tinker and Stanley Morse reported to Great Lakes on June 27th for recruit training; Lt. Commander Arthur Thayer also reported on June 27th at Norfolk, Virginia, for two weeks of counseling school; SA Wilson Cox of Frederic reported to Philadelphia in July for two years of active duty was promoted to seaman apprentice, from seaman recruit.

PONY TALES

By Janet Olson

There is a saying among people who have horses or ponies that "water" is the cheapest food. Water is as important to your pony's well being as it is to yours, but you have an advantage in that so many of the things you eat and drink contain water, while your pony eats mostly dry feed, such as hay, corn and grain and must be given his water separately. If your pony has a stream flowing through his pasture, wonderful, but few ponies are this lucky and most of them must be watered daily. Don't ever forget to check water twice a day. If you have a large water container be sure that you empty it thoroughly every other day, don't just fill it up again and again as the bottom of the container is bound to have some dirt settle in it and it must be kept clean. A pony doesn't like dirty water any better than you would.

If your pony has been on "dry lot feed" all winter don't just turn him out to pasture and forget him. Start him with two or three hours a day on pasture until he becomes used to the change of food. Always make any change of food a gradual one.

For those of you who find having to buy hay a bother or have a shortage of storage space there is a fine product on the market made by the Purina Co. Purina Horse Chow Checkers has a combination of grain, roughage, and other vital ingredients that your horse needs. There is no need to feed hay if you use Checkers. The South Branch Ranch is your Purina dealer in this area.
